CIMB Contracts For Difference

Contracts for Difference (CFD) is a tradable instrument that mirrors the movements of the asset underlying it. It allows for profits or losses to be realized when the underlying asset moves in relation to the position taken, but the actual underlying asset is never owned. Essentially, it is a contract between the client and the broker.

CFDs provide much higher leverage than traditional trading. Standard leverage in the CFD market begins as low as 10% margin requirement. Lower margin requirements mean less capital outlay for the trader/investor, and greater potential returns.
